MANCRESTER BUREAU, RICHMOND TIMES, 1112 HOLL STREET, BEATTIE BLOCK.

A family row occurred late last evening s corner of Thirtleth and Everett streets between Albert Dowdy, George Blankenship, and George Dowdy. During the melee Albert Dowdy fired a doublearrelled shot-gun and wounded his brother, George Dowdy, in the right arm. Albert Dowdy and George Blankenship then made their escape, but the police are on the lookout for them. The injury Bustained by George Dowdy is not serious.

About midnight Officer Jones arrested Albert Dowdy and George Hankenship on Twenty-second street. The former was charged with shooting his brother, and the latter was charged with trespass. They were looked up in the station-house. The men had been drinking, and quarreiled over a frivolous matter. Dowdy refused to discuss the matter after his arrest. Officer Jones said he did not know the cause of the difficulty other than that the men were drinking.

THE FINAL MUSICALE.

The music class of Miss Beulah Duval had their final musicale at her residence on Perry street and Cowardin avenue, last Friday night.

The scholars acquitted themselves creditably to the enjoyment of all present.

The prizes were awarded to Misses Mattle Darden, of Manchester, and Fearl Winfree, of Drewry's Bluff, for perfect lessons and to Master Reeves Winfree for improvement.

HAD A FIGHT.

Thomas Hanceck and Charies Clay, two farmers of Chesterfield, had a lively fight in front of Kahl's stere in Swanshoro yesterday. They were arrested by Policeman Alex. Alvis, who took them before 'Squire C. T. Jones and were bailed for their appearance before the Swansboro Police Court Monday.

AFTER THE PERPETRATOR.
Agent Emmett Taylor was in the city yesterday in the interest of the S. P. C. A. He was looking after the party who broke the leg of the cow owned by Mr. J. W. Puckett, of east Twelfth street. This cow was a fine animal and some one no doubt maliciously injured it. The attention of the outrage was called to the notice of the Society and they are looking for the perpetrator with the assistance of the Manchester volice.

HIT WITH A ROCK.

William Taylor, a negro youth, made his appearance in the station house last night hunting for a justice to issue a warrant against another negro named Harris. He charged Harris with hitting him in the head with a rock. Harris got out a warrant charging Taylor with cutting him with a whip. When Taylor made his appearance before the officers his head was badly out and he was bleeding profusely. They will tell their tale Monday.

SHOT AT A NEGRO.

While Officer Wright was on his beat

While Officer Wright was on his beat he heard a noise at the store of Mr. B. T. Roach, on Hull and Fifth streets, about 1 o'clock yesterday morning.

He went to investigate, and when he had gotten near the house a negro broke and ran from under the shadow. The officer gave chase, and followed the fleeing man for several blocks.

He saw the man was about to escape.

man for several blocks.

He saw the man was about to escape, and he drew his pisto and opened fire. When he fired the third shot the man fell. The officer, in going where the man was, fell in a ditch, and when he got up the bird was out of sight. On returning to the place where the man was first seen Mr. Wright discovered four brasses used on railroad boxes. They were in a bag that the party had left in his successful attempt in cluding the policeman.

The man was described as being a large negro, very black, and waighing about 185 pounds. The officer is satisfied that he hit the man when he fired his pistol as he was seen going up Bainbridge street by some of the residents at their window, who said the man walked slowly and appeared to be wounded.

HIS FIRST ARREST.

HIS FIRST ARREST. HIS FIRST ARREST.

Officer J. W. Moore made an arrest yesterday morning, and his prisoners will have a hearing before the Mayor Menday. While the officer was on upper Hull street he saw a fight going on between Cain Deane and Henry Jones. They were having it very lively until the ""ride of the Force" made his appearance and called the game. He locked Jones up and summoned Deane to make his appearance on Monday.

DR. HIDEN ON POLONIUS.

HB WAS BOTH A HTPOCRITE AND A FUOL.

Highly Interesting Discussion as to These Two Characteristics-Shakespeare's Fools Not All Alike.

A modern writer on Shakespeare has undertaken to prove that the play of "Hamlet" is a dramatic exposition of the religious philosophy of modern times, and that the principal characters of the place are intended to represent the various religious forces at work in the world.

Of course this is mere speculation—mere theorizing apart from the facts. The theorist seems to know more about Shakspeare's characters than Shakspeare himself knew; but still, I am obliged to agree with the homely American humor-himself knew; but still, I am obliged to agree with the homely American humor ist who said, "It is better not to know so much than to know so many thing, that ain't so."

In this paper, then, there will be no attempt at any pet theory. Of the character of Polonius I shall endeavor, in a plain and common sense way, to give such a view as may be warranted by an examination of the facts ofthe case. These facts are mainly the words and the conduct of Polonius himself as set forth in the play of "Hamlet."

I believe that a fair and natural interpretation of these facts has led me to the conclusion that Polonius was (I) a hypocrite, and (2) a fool.

AS TO HIS HYPOCRASY.

hypocrite, and (2) a fool.

AS TO HIS HYPOCRASY.

And first as to his hypocrisy: He is introduced in Act i, scene c, where hisess the King's leave for Laertes to return to France. He pretends that he does not desire Laertes to go; and that his "show leave" has been "wruing" from him by "laboursome petition." Whether this pretence had been kept up in a previous interview with Laertes himself does not appear; but that it was only a pretence he pretty clearly indicated by the subsequent conduct of Polonius, who is evidently pleased at the idea of having a "fast" son, who can hold his own among the drinking, swearing, fencing sambling nakes of the corrupt and licentious circle of Parisian "nigh life."

In the advice to Ophelia, we find as much of realness and carnestness ac Polonius was capable of: and yet the whole speech is low, coarse, and utterly destitute of any appreciation of the character and the conduct of Ophelia and of Hamlet. And even where most in earnest he can not leave off his characteristig mouthing, as "Not to crack the wind of the poor phrase (wronging it thus), you'litender me a fool."

It is impossible to conceive of an honest, AS TO HIS HYPOCRASY.

der me a fool.

Is impossible to conceive of an honest, alghiforward man uttering such can; this, when advising a pure-minded I lovely daughter as to a matter which deeply concerned her honour and her process.

daughter:

"Read on this book,"
That show of such an exercise may colour
Your ioneliness."

Then to himself:

"We are oft to blame in this—"Tis too much proved that with devotion's vision."

Then to himself:

"We are oft to blame in this—
"Its too much proved that with devotion's visage.
And plous action we do sugar o'er
The devil himself."

There can be ittile doubt that when Polonius said this he thought he was saying a really meritorious thing; and we can hardly be sure that he did not regard this bit of moralizing as a pretty fair off-set to the deceifful eaves-dropping when he was about to practice.

A man will hardly do much in the way of deceiving others until he has first succeeded in practicing a good dead of deception upon himself. Paul Clifford was obliged to convince himself that society was a grand swindling corporation before he could be content to take to the road as a genti-manly highwayman, and live by what he would have called robbing the robbers.

It is clear, however, from the lines just quoted that Polonius had not succeeded in palming himself off upon himself in the character of an honest man. In fact, what he called his wisdom was arrant folly; and what he applauded as his reach—I. e. extensive intellectual resources was an uncommonly slim supply of brains.

It may estimate of the intellectual capacity of this character I am aware that I am somewhat at variance with current opinions. The Danish courtier is often spoken of as the typical "worldly wiseman." But I have only to say that we are not here concerned with the Polonius of Shakspeare.

There can be no doubt that Shakspeare meant to represent familet as the most intellectual character in the play. He is—"The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue, sword."

His insight into human character is so profound, and his analysis of motive so quick, subtle and acute as to appear almost instinctive. He skiffully concefte himself from critical dissection; he throws Polonius off the scent; puzzles and terrifies the king and queen; folls Laertes, and utterly overwhelms Evzenerantz and Guildenstern. Now, such a man's opinion of the Lord Chamberlain'a intellect would seem to be entitled to no small weigh in making up our own esti
